In this period of rapid change stimulated by globalisation and national policies promoting the knowledge economy, it is essential to understand the orientations and actions of the academic profession who occupy such a central position in this. What are their views towards the increasing relevance, internationalisation, and the nature of their workplace, and what challenges does this pose in a period of massive turnover of academic staff?
Australian higher education is faced with a massive challenge over the next decade with respect to its core resource: academic staff. Over the next five years 25% of its senior academic staff will reach retirement age with another 25% in the following five years. Combining this with the government’s ambitious agenda for the expansion of participation in tertiary education, the challenge of rejuvenating and retaining academic staff without doubt is becoming one of the major management issues in the coming years.

The academic labour market always has been an international one, but with competitor countries such as the US and the UK facing similar baby boom challenges and quickly developing systems, such as China putting even more pressure on this market, a positioning of the Australian academic profession in terms of its relative attractiveness, vis-à-vis its key competitor systems is an essential element in exploring viable institutional strategies to tackle this challenge head on.

This international conference will address these issues on the basis of the results of a 20+ country international comparative study undertaken over the period 2007-2008. It will be the first opportunity to use the full international dataset that the study has generated. On day one, international researchers participating in the study will analyse the attractiveness of the academic profession and the challenges faced in three main geographical regions: Europe, the Americas and Asia. During the second day, the Australian challenges will be framed in the context of its key competitor systems and the challenges they face, and possible strategies to deal with this will be canvassed.

About the LH Martin Institute

The LH Martin Institute was established to meet an urgent need in Australia and the region for high quality leadership and management education through the provision of a suite of tailored executive and award programs focusing on institutional management and leadership.

Our programs address the contemporary context of tertiary institutions, with an emphasis on the need for strategically aware, context sensitive and change capable leaders and managers at all institutional levels. They are characterised by:

• a focus on the future needs of tertiary institutions and the next generation of leaders
• expert perspectives on emerging trends and issues in tertiary education, both local and global
• evidence based approaches to leadership and management effectiveness in tertiary sector contexts
• multi-modal approaches to learning and development, from theory and critical analysis to applied problem solving and practical application.

Participants will have access to the most current and relevant literature, case studies and practitioner experiences across the full spectrum of issues facing leaders and managers in tertiary education, locally and internationally.

The Institute's activities include award programs, executive workshops, collaborative projects and other activities comprising of education and training courses, conferences and seminars, research and consulting projects.

We aim to create a nationally and internationally recognised centre of teaching and research excellence for the enhancement of tertiary education leadership and management.
